Applications:

Mechanical Wrist Watch

A hand-wound wristwatch is a timepiece that requires winding in order to operate. The winding process is done by turning a crown on the side of the watch, which can also be used to adjust the time. Mechanical wristwatches are more traditional and are typically more accurate than quartz watches.

The Mechanical Wrist Watch features a case made of stainless steel and a white dial with silver markers. It is water resistant up to 50m and comes with a two-year warranty. The watch is powered by a manual winding movement, which means it must be wound manually for it to function. This type of wristwatch is perfect for those who prefer a classic look and enjoy the process of winding their watch on a regular basis.
